

Donald N. Lamson is head of the Washington, DC team of the global Financial Institutions Advisory & Financial Regulatory Group of Shearman & Sterling LLP. He advises international banks and financial institutions on bank regulatory and supervisory issues involving derivative activities, capital markets, M&A, changes in control, investments, internal investigations, enforcement and consumer compliance. Prior to that, he spent 30 years at the OCC, the regulator of national banks. Detailed to the Treasury Department, he helped draft the Administration's proposal for financial reform, which later became the Dodd-Frank Act.